Customized employment (CE) provides an opportunity for an employer to leverage the talents, skills, and interest of an employee to strategically meet the company needs.

The use of customized employment is a good business decision made by an employer to tap into a pool of qualified job seekers who are dependable, reliable, and get the job done.

CE benefits the operations of the company.

The employer retains valuable staff and decrease turnover with the hire of employees from the untapped resource of job seekers' with disabilities who are willing and ready to work. Individuals with disabilities offer their experiences of being innovative and creative problem solvers and bring those skills into the workplace to generate solutions for the company.

The use of CE techniques, for many businesses, has been a source of economic development.

CE hires by small to corporate size businesses have resulted in generating additional revenue for many companies. Company improvements are demonstrated by enhanced staff morale, increased production and job performances, improved overall attendance, a rise in existing customers satisfaction, and growth in new customers.
